Overview

The 4-hr New Mexico Tech course, Surviving Bombing Incidents for Educators, provides school personnel with the skills necessary to perform critical life-saving actions in the immediate aftermath of a bombing incident, a critical moment where those who wish to help can perform life-saving actions to sustain life while medical personnel arrive at the scene.

Participants are presented with lectures, discussions, and demonstrations on the hazards and injuries associated with bombings; these activities culminate in a series of performance-based exercises designed to allow course participants to practice life-saving tactics in bombing scenarios.

- Describe the processes and physical characteristics associated with explosive events.
- Identify and implement the techniques, tactics, and procedures necessary to safely and effectively respond to post-blast incidents.
- Demonstrate the correct methods of use and application of tourniquets, pressure dressings, and methods of hemorrhage control.

Participants will receive a personal trauma kit containing a tourniquet, chest seal, pressure dressing, and more. Participant certification is available to those who complete the course.

To maximize the number of attendees, there will be a morning session and an afternoon session of the class. Please make sure to choose the registration link for the session you are wanting to attend.
